

Viking navigation tools

Vikings used “sunstones” — crystals of Iceland spar calcite, cordierite or tourmaline — to guide them to Britain and across the Atlantic with near-perfect accuracy, according to scientists at Eotvos Lorand University, Budapest. They said computer simulations proved that the raiders could find their way even in heavy fog using the crystals.

The Times
5/4/2012